The Making of a Poem is not a book which lends itself to pigeon-holing. It's not a standard anthology, though given its subtitle is 'A Norton Anthology of Poetic Forms', it could be seen as a companion to The Norton Anthology of Poetry. Yet there's not much in common between those projects other than sharing some of the same poems.

Because poems are meanings, even the saddest poem I write is proof that I want to survive. And therefore it represents an affirmation of life in all its complexities and contradictions. An additional miracle comes to me as the maker of poems: Because poems can be shared between poet and audience, they also become a further triumph over human isolation.

This works perfectly fine as an anthology but the criticism offered by the authors is somewhat of a hit and miss. But, if you have long deferred looking at structured poetry because your first encounter with it made it sound all very rules-y, this anthology will help you change that viewpoint by making it clear that the poetic form is as much a mood setting factor as the actual words.
